THE HERALD'S REMOVAL.

Today The Herald will vacate the building at the corner of First South and West Temple streets that it has occupied for many years and remove to its new quarters in the Progress building, 149 South Main street. The removal of a modern newspaper plant is a gigantic undertaking, but The Herald expects to accomplish the task without missing an issue or a news

There is serrow in Eng.and now, and mourning in many a British home. Aside from the merits of this war, the morality of it, the humanity of it, the with which soldiers have naught to dothese fallen heroes deserve a tear of nity, and the loved ones who must wait at home for them in vain are entitled to the consolation and consideration of mankind.

Serious trouble is ahead of the empire. These reverses, these checks, these defeats, these results of unwisdom and false reckoning, are having an influence in international politics that English statesmen dread, a depressing effect on commercial and financial affairs that makes the people fearful and fretful. But criticisms, complaints and changes cannot bring back to life the sacrifices already elahued. They may prevent others, however, and the English people never hesitate to demand a change when they feel that the policies pursued are wrong.

IRISH SYMPATHIES

Anglicized newspapers are trying to by circulating falsehoods concerning did drop it in 1896. When did he pick the alleged antipathy of Kruger for the Catholics, and by constantly calling attention to the Irish officers and regiments in the British army.

There isn't a Catholic newspaper in the country but has punctured that British in one of the bloodiest fights story of religious opposition by showing that among the most trusted of to be comparatively slight, while 1,500 Kruger's advisers are members of the Catholic church, while the Irishmen and the rest sent pell mell, seeking apon whom England depends upon whom England depends very sional soldiers, who entered the service before the policy of crushing Christian peoples and weaker civilized nations had been declared by Mr. Chamberlain. justice or the necessity of it-matters But leaving all this out of the controversy, there is no religious issue in the Transvaal war, no dispute between Ireland and the Dutch republic.

It is such a conflict as has occurred before between the strong and the weak, and whenever powerful governments undertake to subjugate . those which are less fortunate, less powerful, less rapacious, and to confiscate Right or wrong, it was not for them the lands of people who aspire to national independence as the American colonies aspired in 1776, as other races and colonies have aspired since, the

To me all this is murder and robbery on a scale of imperial magnitude and for the basest motives. It has been done by-pocritically, professing the purposes of civilization and humanity which the devil himself would be ashamed to assume under such chromstances. Lastly, I ask myself this question: If two little nations like the Transvarl and the Orange Free State, with a combined population less than that of San Francisco, can challenge England's military might on the field of battle: can beat English soldlers, even when outnumbered, as the Boers did both at Dundee and Elamoslaagte; can threaten the prestige of England with the most serious blow it has received during this century; if, I say, a handful of people can do this in their fight for independence, the Irish race, which numbers at least 20,000,000 at the present day; is called upon to view the problem of home rule in the new light of these startling facts.

THE ROBERTS CASE,

A Dishonest Fight. (Denver Post.)
The opposition to Roberts was entirely partisan in the beginning. It was reinforced by religious prejudice, and soon

wave of horror was made to sweep over the country. Well-intentioned people protested by the hundreds of thousands against Roberts. They gave their representatives an opportunity to assume a well-nigh forgotten role of righteousness by making a vicarious sacrifice of Roberts on the altar of purity.

The dishonesty of the fight on Roberts can be easily seen. In 1855 he was a candidate for congress. At that time the leaders of the Mormon church in Utah had agreed to deliver the state to the Republican party. They fulfilled their contract, as was known they would do. Roberts was opposed by Republicans simply because a Democrat that year, though just as much a polygamist then as now. In 1888 conditions had changed. The silver wave had made Utah so strongly Democratic that even the large vote at the dication of the Mormon church leaders was insufficient to turn the state into the Republican column. Roberts was nominated and the fight on him was made because of his polygamous practices, undoubtedly in the hope that the Gentile vote could be concentrated against him and the timorous Mormons as well bluffed into opposition to him. Roberts, however, never was the actual choice of the Democratic party leaders. They opposed his nomination, but without success. They supported him on his promise to explain all the charges against him. This he failed to do and having so failed he will receive little consolation from his former political friends at home.

As stated, the method of his expulsion was unconstitutional. He had all the requirements of a representative, and it is surprising that so many southern Democratic representatives have in the past been ousted from the house in numbers when the Republican majority needed increasing. This they seem to have forgetten. The Republican side, of course, voted as told. Meanwhile President McKinley denies having knowingly appointed polygamists to office, though a Presbyterian minister of Logan, Utah, wrote three times protesting against the appointment of a polygamist, and has the rep wave of horror was made to sweep over the country. Butte Miner: The precedent set in the Roberts case is a dangerous one, as has frequently been pointed out before. I places in the hands of a reckless majority the right to question the title of mediected to represent their districts in congress, and my the simple force of number rob many constituencies of their representation in the house. It is not the way the constitution contemplated either house should exercise its prerogative of expelling a member.

ANNA GOULD'S HUSBAND.

Chicago Times-Herald: Count Bohi de Castellane has arrived in New York and in an interview he declares that he never gambled or speculated in his life. People who are acquainted with the facts concerning Boni's matrimonial operation will not be likely to believe this without proof.

Denver Post: Even after reaching this side of the water Count Castellane continues to squander the Gould money. He paid a toll of $il for the privilege of calling a Paris editor a liar by cable.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: Count Bond de Castellane was careful to get on the right side of the pond before issuing his challenge to the Paris editor. Chicago Record: Count Castellane said he would slap the face of the editor of Figaro, and the Atlantic ocean was be-tween them when he said it.

Denver News: Count Castellane may be a big man in France, but in this country he is only Anna Gould's husband.
